I. There are 2 fundamental objections to air strike which have never been answered:

- Inasmuch as no one has been able to devise a satisfactory message to Khrushchev to which his reply could not outmaneuver us, an air strike means on U. S.-initiated "Pearl Harbor" on a small nation which history could neither understand nor forget
- 2) Inasmuch as the concept of a clean, swift strike has been abandoned as militarily impractical, it is generally agreed that the more widespread air attack will inevitably lead to an invasion with all of its consequences.
- II. There are 2 fundamental advantages to a blockade which have never been answered:

- It is a more prudent and flexible step which enables us to move to an air strike, invasion or any other step at any time it proves necessary, without the "Pearl Harbor" posture.
- It is the step least likely to precipitate general war while still causing the Soviets -- unwilling to engage our Navy in our waters -- to back down and abandon Castro.
